I began my career as a medic in the U.S. Air Force and the Army National Guard. I spent my days teaching troops to think clearly under pressure, tie tourniquets, and start IVs in unpredictable circumstances. Today I work in the trenches with collection sites, training collectors on how to best serve our clients. Whether obeying the chain of command or administering drug tests, everyone learns best with hands-on training. Quest Diagnostics helped me to realize that educating people is my purpose.

The highest priority of every collection site is to provide a seamless experience for our donors. Regardless of job title, we should all be of service to one another. That commitment means we all work together towards a common goal – improving workplace safety, deterring drug use, and hopefully shifting people's lives in an optimistic direction.
