In life, we each have mentors who make such big impacts upon us that they help to shape who we become. My high school art teacher, Mr. Weiss, was one of these influencers; he was my definitive teacher. He had ways of pushing you just beyond your limits, drawing out your best efforts, and managing to garner your deep admiration in return. He set high standards and expected excellence. This was his legacy.

In my decade at Quest Diagnostics, I have worked to make my managers successful by putting their best interests ahead of my own. As my roles changed, that same ambition now encompasses the well-being of our broader business. I care deeply, think creatively, and expect greatness from myself and others. My hope is that these traits inspire a definitive culture. This is the legacy I strive for.
